

A career with the OIG provides individuals with an opportunity to be involved in meaningful work that makes a difference in how our Government operates and responds to the American public. We offer opportunities for:

- Career advancement, including our mentoring program;
- A work environment that provides professional growth;
- Travel opportunities throughout our Nation; and
- An excellent benefits program and compensation with regular increases.

To accomplish our goals, the OIG offers a wide range of job opportunities, including positions like criminal investigators, auditors, evaluators, attorneys, writer-editors, and information technology specialists. The OIG also participates in the Federal Career Intern Program, a two-year internship designed to recruit talented individuals. Upon completion of the internship, participants may be considered for noncompetitive permanent employment.

We aim to bring a variety of perspectives to our organization by recruiting employees with diverse educational backgrounds and degrees such as business, accounting, criminal justice, communications, or science.
